Elite Aviation Products Bids on Contract Worth Upwards of $100 Million

Irvine, California November 18, 2014 –The fruits of the surging aerospace sector continue to materialize for Elite Aviation Products (EAP) as they bid on a contract with the potential to be worth over $100 million over the next several years.

“It has been paramount for us since day 1 to position ourselves in such a way that best serves our customers, both philosophically and geographically,” stated Zeeshawn Zia, COO of Elite Aviation Products, “Coming from the buyer side of the industry, both Dustin [Tillman, CEO] and I have experienced the headache of working with companies who were not only struggling to meet their contractual obligations, but also attempting to overcome the logistics of being hundreds if not thousands of miles away.”

Choosing Irvine, in the heart of southern California, was a very strategic decision for Tillman and Zia. Being located in this hotbed of aerospace activity makes Elite Aviation Products a very attractive candidate for contracts such as this. This particular opportunity, being proximately located to EAP’s headquarters, will be free from the worry of overcoming logistical issues associated with distance; this strategic proximity is a key differentiator for Elite Aviation Products as it will allow EAP to fully support their customers from development, to the first delivery, and beyond.

“A large contract like this for a local company would bring Elite steady revenue for years to come,” said Tillman, CEO of Elite, “Being in such a close proximity to so many industry leaders will help Elite Aviation Products reap the benefits of these tremendous opportunities in the market.”
